Introduction

Pennsylvania Act 153 of 1996 (“Open Space Lands, Acquisition and Preservation”) authorizes local governments (excluding counties) to establish earned income and real estate taxes specifically dedicated to the acquisition of land and easements for the purpose of providing open space benefits. Such taxes are established through voter referendum.<sup>1</sup> The voter-approved taxes may exceed the standard limits on tax rates placed on local government. Under separate statutory authority, local governments may also borrow money (including issuing bonds) to fund open space acquisitions. This borrowing may occur with or without voter approval depending on circumstances.

In this report, WeConservePA reviews the voting outcomes of and monies generated by these open space tax and bond referendums. In providing analysis, the report draws heavily on data accessed from The Trust for Public Land’s LandVote database through December 2021.

Ninety-two Pennsylvania local municipalities have passed open space tax and bond referendums through the general election of 2021. Nearly all these municipalities are located in the Delaware River watershed in eastern Pennsylvania. Earned income taxes are both the most commonly approved funding mechanisms and greatest source of funding.

<sup>1</sup> In addition to acquiring real property interests, the statute allows up to 25% of open space taxes to be used to: (1) develop, improve, design, engineer, and maintain open space acquired with dedicated open space taxes and (2) prepare the resource, recreation, or land use plan needed to acquire open space.

Altogether, municipal open space referendums have nominally raised $819.6 million—$491.8 million in earned income taxes and $33.7 million in real estate taxes as well as $294 million in voter-approved borrowing—for conservation since 1996. Because these figures do not account for inflation over the past quarter century, changes in property values and personal incomes, and other complicating factors, they understate the actual funds dedicated to open space protection in terms of 2021 dollars.

The report does not examine local government open space work that is funded from regular (non-voter approved) taxes and borrowing. It also does not examine county open space programs.

Source Data and Limitations

LandVote tracks open space referendums across the country. It includes the type of funding mechanism, the date the vote was held, an estimate of the funding raised, and the results of the vote.

For borrowing, LandVote counts the face value of the bonds authorized rather than the higher cost of repaying the bonds in the future (principal and interest on the borrowing). Bond referendums may include borrowing for conservation and non-conservation purposes. In these cases, LandVote tracks both total funding approved and the portion dedicated to conservation (estimating the amount for open space where necessary). In Pennsylvania, the total and the portion dedicated to conservation are almost always one and the same. Where they are different, this report uses only the conservation funding figures.

For tax-based measures, LandVote counts the estimated revenue generated for the duration of the tax. When the tax is not limited to a specific term, a duration of 20 years is used. When a ballot measure increases an existing tax, LandVote counts only the value of the added increment. In all cases, total funds generated are conservatively estimated and do not reflect expansion of the tax base (whether that be increases in incomes or property values).

Further understating revenue, LandVote does not account for inflation. To put this into perspective, a dollar of tax revenue in 1996 is the equivalent of $1.76 in 2021 revenue (using the U.S. government's Consumer Price Index).

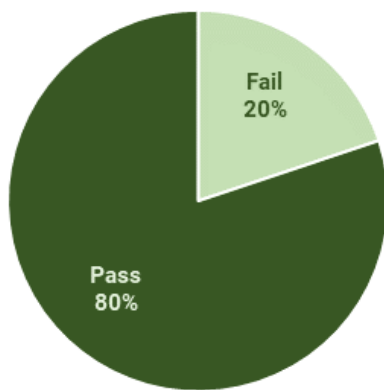

Pennsylvania government has no mechanism for collecting and reliably reporting on open space tax revenue. WeConservePA judged that the benefit provided by establishing more accurate figures was not sufficient to justify the extensive additional research (involving successful collection of years of data from each of the referendum-passing local governments), analysis, and calculations that would be required.

Numbers, Outcomes, and Locations of Referendums

Pennsylvania townships have held 151 open space referendum votes since 1996. No boroughs or cities have attempted an open space referendum. The oldest votes occurred in 1996, and the newest—two in Lehigh County—passed in 2021.

Fewer than 5% (119) of Pennsylvania local governments have held open space referendums. Voters in 92 townships (3.4%) have passed at least one open space referendum. Measures in an additional 27 townships have failed. For detailed information about each referendum, see Appendix 1.

Open space referendums have been popular with voters. Of the 151 referendums offered to Pennsylvania voters since 1996, 121 (80%) have passed (Figure 1). Across all 151 referendums—whether passed or failed—the average vote was 62% in favor and 38% opposed.)

Figure 1. Passage versus failure of local municipal open space referendums in Pennsylvania. Open space referendums are popular with Pennsylvania voters, four out of every five passing. Looking at all Pennsylvania municipal open space referendum results since 1996, 62% of votes on average are cast in favor of open space funding.

Every year or two, additional municipalities pass an open space referendum for the first time (Figure 2).

Figure 2. First time passage of an open space referendum by a municipality per year. One hundred nineteen townships have held open space referendums at least once in the past quarter century. Voters in 92 of those municipalities have approved a measure at least once.

The referendums have occurred overwhelmingly in eastern Pennsylvania (Figure 3) with ninety percent within the Delaware River Basin. Just four municipalities west of the Susquehanna River have enacted open space referendums, the farthest west being Halfmoon Township, Centre County. Only one referendum has passed north of Monroe County.

Bucks and Chester Counties are hotspots for open space referendums. Together they have 56 municipalities that have passed an open space referendum—61% of the 92 total. Sixty-one percent of Chester County’s landmass is in municipalities that have passed open space referendums. In Bucks County, the percentage is even higher—71%.

Funding Mechanisms and Revenue Generation

A municipal open space referendum may present voters with one of three mechanisms to fund open space acquisition and stewardship:

- a dedicated earned income tax;
- a dedicated property tax; or
- borrowing (issuing bonds—taking on debt—to finance capital projects).

Voters may be and sometimes are presented with more than one mechanism to approve or disapprove, for example, a dedicated earned income tax to fund conservation in the long-term and borrowing to fund an important acquisition immediately. Separate votes on separate mechanisms may occur in the same election or years apart.

Dedicated earned income taxes are the funding mechanism most commonly approved by voters. Among successful municipal open space referendums:

- 68 out of 121 (56%) were for earned income taxes;
- 13 (11%) were for property taxes; and
- 40 (33%) were for bond issues (Figure 5).

In aggregate, the open space funding provided to municipalities via referendum is as follows:

- Earned income taxes supply $492 million;
- Property taxes raise $34 million; and
- Bond issues provide $294 million (Figure 5).

Together, municipal open space referendums have yielded $819.6 million for conservation in Pennsylvania since 1996. In comparison, the state’s Keystone Recreation, Park, and Conservation Fund has distributed $1.23 billion statewide since 1995,<sup>2</sup> sixty-five percent of this ($800 million) for open space protection, park development, and State Park and Forests.<sup>3</sup> In other words, municipal open space referendums have provided about 96% as much conservation-related funding as the Keystone Fund despite only being approved in 3.4% of Pennsylvania municipalities.

Approvals for conservation funding were greatest in the years 2005, 2006, and 2008 with nearly $330 million from all funding sources in those years. The Great Recession appears to have greatly dampened interest in open space referendums for the next half-dozen years, but numbers are now once again trending upward (Figure 6).

Ten Failed Referendums Led to Future Successes

For a municipality whose open space referendum failed to gain voter approval, experience indicates that there is a substantial chance for passage of a new referendum in future years.

Bucks County has had four townships that passed open space referendums after first failing:

- Hilltown Township first attempted to pass a bond resolution in 1996 that failed after a tied vote. Four years later it passed with 69% approval a quarter of a percent increase in earned income tax to buy open space, development rights, and conservation/agricultural easements.
- Newtown Township tried to pass a 0.1% earned income tax (EIT) increase in 1997 that failed with 54% objecting. Eleven years later, in 2008, the same measure was proposed and was accepted with 61% agreeing.
- Plumstead Township first attempted a 7-year, 0.5% earned income tax increase that failed (51% opposed) in 1999. Three years later, in 2001, it proposed a $6 million bond that passed with 76% approval. Four years later, another bond passed (77% Yes), this time for $8 million. Four years after that, another bond passed (51% Yes) for $4.5 million. These three bonds (2001, 2005, and 2009) together allocated $18.5 million for open space, agricultural, recreation, and historical lands.
- Springfield Township first attempted passing a bond resolution in 2000, which failed by only 2% of the vote. Six years later, a $5 million bond passed with 74% approving the purchase of easements to preserve open space.

Chester County had four townships where referendum failures were followed by passage:

- East Nottingham first failed to pass a 0.5% EIT increase in 2003 but succeeded (50%) the next year. Twelve years later, another 0.5% increase passed by 12 points for the preservation of open space and farmland.
- London Grove Township passed a 0.25% EIT increase in 2006 with a 3-point margin after failing to pass the same resolution three years prior by a 2-point margin.
- Schuylkill Township attempted a $20 million bond resolution that failed to pass by 16 points in 2005. The next year it passed a 0.25% EIT increase by 27 points.
- West Vincent Township failed to pass a 0.00056 mill per $100 increase in property taxes with 60% opposed in 1999 but passed a 2002 property tax proposal with 63% approval for a tax increase of 0.00049 mill per $100 of assessed valuation for open space.

In 2006, Plainfield Township in Northampton County failed to pass a quarter of a percent increase in earned income tax proposal to purchase land, easements, and property rights by 16 points; however, it did pass the next year with 60% in favor.

Upper Saucon Township in Lehigh County failed to pass a 0.25 percent earned income tax increase for open space and recreational lands in 2008. Thirteen years later (2021), Upper Saucon Township passed a 0.10 percent increase by a 2-point margin.
